

Gregor Baum, born and raised in Germany, is an international student who embarked on a life-changing journey at North Carolina Wesleyan University. Initially drawn to the university to pursue his dream of playing college tennis, Gregor's path took an unexpected turn due to a sport injury that dashed his athletic aspirations. However, Gregor chose to see this setback as a disguised blessing, providing him with the opportunity to explore new interests. It was during this time that he discovered service above self; this newfound perspective sparked a deep passion within Gregor, driving him to take action and make a difference in the world. He started the Rotaract Club on campus where the Rotarctors supported different kind of social programs. Later on, he joined the Rotarian Action Group Against Slavery (RAGAS), an organization dedicated to connecting, empowering, and equipping Rotarians worldwide to engage their communities in the fight against human trafficking.

Gregor is determined to make a tangible impact by not only raising awareness but also by working towards eradicating all forms of modern slavery, both locally and globally. Gregor seeks to mobilize individuals and communities, encouraging them to take a stand against human trafficking and actively contribute to its eradication.

Gregor Baum is a true example of resilience, adaptability, and the power of turning challenges into opportunities. Although his dreams of playing college tennis were cut short by injury, his unwavering commitment to service above self has led him down a remarkable path. With his passion for fighting human trafficking and dedication to empowering others, Gregor is making a significant and positive long lasting impact in the ongoing battle against modern slavery.
